IN THE NEWS: WILLIAMS AND PFAFF DESCRIBE IMPACT OF GOP TAX BILL ON GRADUATE EDUCATION AT UW IN SEATTLE TIMES OP-ED

Submitted by Katherine Stovel on December 11, 2017 - 7:36pm

Nathalie Williams is an associate professor of Sociology and International Studies, and director of the Ph.D. program in the University of Washington's Jackson School of International Studies. Steven Pfaff is a professor and former graduate program chair in the UW's Department of Sociology. Together they penned an op-ed for the Seattle Times that describes the devastating impact the U.S. House-passed plan to tax graduate student tuition waivers would have on students, the university and the region. Read their articel here (may be behind a paywall):

https://www.seattletimes.com/opinion/grad-students-can-change-the-world-but-not-if-gop-has-its-way/

People Involved:  Steve Pfaff  Nathalie Williams
News Category:  Faculty and Staff  Graduate Education