SOCIOLOGY STUDY ABROAD CREDIT

We offer study abroad classes up to twice a year. These courses are led by faculty members and investigate social issues in other parts of the world. Recent programs have visited Zimbabwe, South Africa, Northern Ireland, Spain, and Rome.

Study abroad credit is given as SOC 195 or SOC 395. For Sociology majors, these credits satisfy Sociology elective requirements. However, except with special permission, they do not apply to upper division requirements. We recommend that Sociology majors complete major requirements in residence at UW, and apply Study Abroad credits to general elective requirements.

For more information on foreign study opportunities, see the UW Study Abroad website.

SPAIN IN AUGUST 24 - SEPTEMBER 15, 2020

Students on this popular program travel to three parts of Spain to learn about some of the challenges facing Spanish society, including economic inequality, populism and migration. Students will have the opportunity to hear from a range of policymakers and professionals as well as affected groups and individuals, learning how Spain's situation and efforts in these areas are similar or different from the US. Topics will include the challenge of regional diversity and separatist movements, feminism, the Roma community, integration of immigrants and minority rights, housing, youth unemployment, and the broader challenges and repercussions of economic austerity and the rise of populism.
